Case Summary:

This 0.4 acre reservoir is located just to the north of the body of water proposed to be named Blackrock Lake (q.v.). The name Ladybug Lake was suggested by a local four-year old who said the small, round lake resembled the shape of a ladybug. The Littleton City Council agreed that the name was in keeping with the theme of applying animal names to the newly-created reservoirs. The name is already used by the City of Littleton. In Jefferson County, approximately 27 km (17 mi) from this body of water, is a park named Ladybug Park, but this would be the first geographic feature in the State named "Ladybug."
